The Edge

Denver Zoo's newest exhibit, The Edge, brings you closer than ever to the Zoo's Amur tigers. It features multiple yards and connecting bridges that allow tigers to stride 12 feet over guests' heads, and a viewing area with a perforated wall that brings visitors mere inches from these magnificent creatures! This allows for unique interactions as guests are able to hear, and even smell, the tigers through the mesh.

Located on almost a full acre of the Zoo's campus, The Edge increased the tigers' outdoor space by almost 50 percent. The yard mimics their natural habitat with a dozen 120-year-old pine trees to provide shade, as well as large pools to keep them cool and provide enrichment.

The Edge is a must-see on any upcoming Denver Zoo visit!

June 22nd - September 16th

Guy Veloso's images capture a moment in time where faith, consciousness, and cuerpo become one through ritual. The photographic documentation of the rituals disrupts our contemporary urban reality, summoning another more ancient reality to action, at the world's end. As we experience Veloso's reality, we become penitents albeit from different hemispheres.

Silent Film Series: Harold Lloyd Comedy Night (1921-22)

Film

Donating Partner: Colorado Chautauqua Association

Chautauqua Auditorium

900 Baseline Road, Boulder

Ticket Procedure: Letter to the Box Office

Featuring live musical accompaniment by Hank Troy, piano.

Silver screen star Harold Lloyd was a comedic genius and one of the most influential filmmakers in early cinema. Sit back and enjoy two of his laugh-out-loud comedy shorts, "Grandma's Boy" (1922) and "A Sailor-Made Man" (1921).

In "Grandma's Boy", Lloyd plays a timid young man who lives with his feisty grandma (Anna Townsend). He's frightened of his own shadow, really, and it's beginning to affect his relationship with the girl of his dreams (Mildred Davis). When the town residents set out to track down a murderer, Harold cowers and retreats to Grandma's. She tells him a fantastic story about his grandfather, rouses his confidence and hands him a magic amulet. Unaware he's been given an umbrella handle, he decides to chase the criminal himself.

The evening continues with "A Sailor-Made Man" featuring Lloyd as an idle, wealthy playboy smitten with a prudent young woman (Mildred Davis). To prove his worth to his bride-to-be's father, the young man joins the Navy, but doesn't realize it's a job he can't quit. When she is kidnapped by a sadistic maharajah, the inexperienced hero leaps into action to rescue his love from peril.

Running time: "Grandma's Boy" (1922). 61 minutes. "A Sailor-Made Man" (1921). 47 minutes.

Silent Film Series: The Scarlet Letter (1926)

Film

Donating Partner: Colorado Chautauqua Association

Chautauqua Auditorium

900 Baseline Road, Boulder

Ticket Procedure: Letter to the Box Office

Starring Lillian Gish and featuring live musical accompaniment by Hank Troy, piano.

Directed by Victor Sjöström, "The Scarlet Letter" is a 1926 American drama based on Nathaniel Hawthorne's 1850 novel. Set in Puritan New England, seamstress Hester Prynne (Lillian Gish) is punished for playing on the Sabbath day, but kindly minister Arthur Dimmesdale takes pity on her. The two fall in love, but Hester is already married to Roger Prynne, a physician who has been missing for seven years. Dimmesdale leaves for England and upon his return, finds Hester pregnant with their child, and the focus of the town's censure. In a humiliating ceremony, she is forced to don the scarlet letter A for adultery until she reveals the father of her child.

MGM was initially reluctant to Lillian Gish's suggestion that they film an adaptation of "The Scarlet Letter". Church and women's groups considered the book unsuitable for the movies. Various writers had struggled to make Hawthorne's story acceptable, suggesting that the plot be altered to establish a relationship between Hester and the Reverend prior to their arrival in the New World, or by having Pearl, their love child, be the result of a secret marriage, or by dispensing with the letter "A" altogether, or even by creating a happy ending. After Lillian Gish met with the leaders of many organizations and invited them to read the script and tour the set. Her pristine reputation, combined with a tasteful script by Hollywood screenwriter Frances Marion, caused them to change their minds and give the project their blessing. The film was announced as "It's a real 'A' picture", taking advantage of the 'A' for Adultery.
